Introduction

This small book is not meant to be a literary effort. It is merely a selection of cases, facts and incidents investigated between the years 1963 and 1970.

Adverse critics will say it goes too far; the majority of Hong Kong people will say it does not go far enough. The second criticism is correct: the book leaves whole areas of injustice, crime and corruption untouched. If time permits there will be a second volume later.

This short volume has taken years to write, most of it being hurried off late at night, at the end of busy days.

All the cases mentioned are true and documents are available. No apologies are offered for this public presentation of injustices that the writer has attempted by all lawful means to have investigated by the Hong Kong bureaucracy without success.
